EXECUTIVE SUMMARY
This paper provides a summary of the Central Australia Aboriginal Community-Controlled Out-of-Home Care Strategy.

Over the last year SNAICC has been facilitating consultations with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and representatives of the community-controlled service sector in Central Australia. Consultations have been focused on informing the creation of an Aboriginal community-led strategy to develop community controlled out-of-home care (OOHC) services.

The project seeks to enable Aboriginal leadership in service design and delivery and places the safe maintenance of children’s cultural, family and community connections at the centre of child protection practice in Central Australia.

A local Steering Committee has been convened for the strategy development that includes representatives of Central Australian Aboriginal Congress, Tangentyere Council, North Australian Aboriginal Justice Agency, Northern Territory Council of Social Services, Ngaanyatjarra Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara (NPY) Women’s Council and Territory Families.

SNAICC’s consultations have further included meetings with leaders of community-controlled services, Aboriginal Elders and community representatives, and Shire Council representatives. On 14 June 2018, SNAICC convened a forum with 33 representatives from these stakeholder groups, with representation from all of the organisations on the Project Steering Committee and additionally:
- Akeyulerre Healing Centre
- Bushmob
- Grandmothers Against Removal
- Julalikari Council
- Children’s Ground
- the Queensland Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Child Protection Peak
- Victorian Aboriginal Child Care Agency.

Consultations at the June forum provided some clear directions for strategy development, with key principles discussed and agreed. The direction provided by stakeholders has remained largely consistent with the outcomes of the earlier 2016 Aboriginal OOHC forum in Alice Springs and demonstrated that there exists a well formed and articulated vision for the future of the sector in Central Australia amongst local Aboriginal leaders.

This strategy aims to restore cultural authority and empower Aboriginal communities to lead and direct the policies, programs and practices that are developed to promote the care and protection of Aboriginal children in Central Australia who are experiencing vulnerability.
The goal of the Central Australia Aboriginal Community-Controlled OOHC Strategy is to ensure that Aboriginal children and young people and their families who are in contact with child protection services in the Northern Territory are safe and have the opportunity to thrive through the provision of a holistic scope of quality and culturally safe supports led by Aboriginal families, communities and community-controlled organisations.

THE GUIDING PRINCIPLES ARE:

1. There is an Aboriginal lens in service development and delivery
2. Self-determination is acknowledged and reflected in services that respect cultural authority
3. Families are empowered to participate through family-led decision making processes across the system
4. Aboriginal organisations deliver holistic family strengthening, placement prevention, reunification and OOHC services to children and families
5. Aboriginal out-of-home care services prioritise safe reunification of children with their families
6. Services are based on trauma-informed practice principles
7. Aboriginal child-rearing practices are understood and valued
8. The voices of children and Elders are listened to in making decisions
9. Realistic and flexible funding for OOHC services is based on need and for service models that are appropriate for the communities in each region
10. Services must have a remote footprint to support children, families and communities outside of major urban centres
11. Transition of OOHC to the Aboriginal community-controlled sector builds on existing service infrastructure in regions
12. Aboriginal organisations are supported to become accredited OOHC service providers through partnerships and/or capacity building strategies.
Representation, policy leadership, sector support and development

CENTRALISED ABORIGINAL OOHC SERVICES
A central resource for families and communities: expertise, case management, support and training

LOCALISED CULTURAL AUTHORITY
Community representatives and families lead services and decisions for their children

Aboriginal community-controlled peak agency

SPECIALISED SUPPORT FOR FAMILIES
Families referred to specialist supports that focus on prevention and early intervention

Elders, grandmothers and Aboriginal community representatives in each community

• Meeting regularly to discuss child safety
• Finding and supporting kin carers
• Facilitating family-led decision making
• Advising child protection agencies
• Supporting safe family reunification

Central Australia Aboriginal Child Safety Hubs
Community-controlled services for Central Australia with expertise in child protection and trauma informed support to children and families

Supporting family reunification

Community child safety leader groups

Referral to specialised support services
Families referred to specialised supports to address issues causing child protection concerns

• Early intervention family support
• Drug and alcohol, family violence, mental health
• Legal services
• Housing, health, welfare, education and disability

Support for community child safety leader groups

Aboriginal Family-Led Decision Making

Mapping kin, finding and assessing placements

Supporting carers and OOHC case management

Keeping kids connected to culture

Supporting family reunification

Support and training for community child safety leader groups

Territory Families
• Child protection investigatory services
• Retains key statutory case decisions

Children’s Court
• Hears and decides upon applications for care and protection orders
• Takes full account of the views of Aboriginal families and communities in decision making

Accreditation
• Provide information and support for OOHC accreditation
• Assesses agencies against accreditation standards

Community child safety leader groups, families and children inform the decisions of Territory families and the Court
The diagram below describes what a model would look like in a fully developed and operational state and is intended to be developed progressively over a 5-year period, commencing in early 2019 and building on initial investments in Aboriginal OOHC services that were pre-existing or commenced in 2018. The Aboriginal Child Safety Hubs (ACSH) model described would operate out of two or three sites, one in Alice Springs, one in Tenant Creek, and potentially a third hub that outreaches to NPY Lands communities from an Alice Springs base. Not all functions of the hub would necessarily be performed by a single service. Consultations suggest that services with different strengths and geographical footprints may be best placed to perform clusters of the identified functions and work collaboratively through a regional network of providers, to offer a holistic suite of services.

Based on consultation with Aboriginal communities and organisations in Central Australia, and on the requirements to establish the intended future model of service delivery, the following strategic priorities have been identified as necessary to operationalise the Central Australia Aboriginal Community-Controlled OOHC Strategy. These strategic priorities are interconnected and interdependent and need to be pursued concurrently rather than understood as an ordered list of priorities. The priorities are:

- Establishing the peak body for Aboriginal children and families
- Establishing the ACSHs
- Establishing child advocate roles with sub-regional coverage
- Identifying or establishing community child safety leader groups
- Developing a kinship care identification and support service
- Establishing a protocol and practice framework between Aboriginal OOHC services and Territory Families
- Developing an Aboriginal Family-led Decision-Making model
- Establishing and implementing a plan for local Aboriginal workforce development
- Meeting quality and accreditation standards
- Building and scaling case management capability
- Building strong partnerships for early intervention and prevention
- Aligning policies and processes with the Aboriginal OOHC model.

This strategy details the activities, resources, responsibilities and timeframes for implementing each of these priorities.
STRATEGY OVERVIEW

The following strategy overview provides a summary of key actions required for the implementation of each strategic priority area. Note that not all actions are reflected in the overview and it is necessary to refer to the implementation plan in section four of the full strategy document to fully understand the implementation actions required.

• Engage the role of the Aboriginal children and families peak to provide training and practice development support for the Aboriginal community-controlled sector workforce | • Complete full accreditation of the ASCHs and Territory Families with the full set of required standards
• Continue standards compliance monitoring, reporting and assessment |

* The provision of OOHC case management would also include the administration of residential care facilities by community-controlled organisations. Although the strategy prioritises finding and supporting family-based kinship care arrangements, residential care will remain necessary for some children. Enabling the role and capacity of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations to provide culturally strong models of residential care is an essential component of developing an Aboriginal community-controlled OOHC system.
